PROUDLY SERVING THE LAURENTIAN UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY SINCE 1961

Negotiated deals with profs continue to roll in

BY NEIL ZACHARJEWICZ
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

The faculty at Laurentian University reached a deal with the administration earlier this year, Huntington University has reached a deal within the last few weeks, and now the University of Sudbury is very close to striking an agreement with its faculty.

"We have reached a tentative agreement," explained Dr. Real Fillion, spokesperson for the University of Sudbury Faculty Association. As of yet, the date for a ratification vote has not been set, Fillion explained, as there are a number of corrections which need to be made to the document before it is ready to be put to a vote. The University of Sudbury Faculty Association has been in a strike position since midnight on January 12st.

"There is a certain amount of relief, of course. Nobody wants to go on strike, but the members haven't voted on (the tentative agreement) yet," Fillion pointed out. "A vote will be scheduled as soon as the corrected document is forwarded to us."

However, Fillion did note that the negotiation team for the University of Sudbury Faculty Association has recommended the agreement to its members.

Meanwhile, the Chair of the Board of Regents and the President of Huntington University have announced that the Board of Regents and the Laurentian University Faculty Association – H have ratified their first collective agreement. The Board of Regents voted in favour of the new agreement on January 19th, and the union did likewise on January 20th.

"Appreciation is expressed to the negotiating team who worked diligently to develop and fashion this first agreement for full-time and sessional members," The Board of Regents stated in a media release. "It will help strengthen the relationship between the Board and faculty to enhance our mission as a small, federated, liberal arts university to grow the leaders of tomorrow."

Laurentian student unions to host 'Spirit of the North'

BY NEIL ZACHARJEWICZ
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Laurentian University is about to feel the spirit.

On February 10th, 11th and 12th, several of the Laurentian student unions will play host to the annual 'Spirit of the North' conference. The event is designed to bring representatives of the various student unions from the Northern Ontario universities together to discuss the issues that affect them. This year's event will see close to 60 people from the Northern Region Caucus of the Canadian Federation of Students (CFS) come to Laurentian to take part in the conference.

"The Northern Region Caucus of the Canadian Federation of Students hosts an annual Spirit of the North conference dedicated specifically to addressing the many important issues facing northern students in our province. Further, the meeting offers an opportunity to plan for forthcoming campaigns aimed at improving both the accessibility and quality of education in Northern Ontario," stated Pat Imbeau, Commissioner of the Northern Region Caucus and Vice-President of L'Association étudiante pour les francophones (AEF). Imbeau noted that the AEF, the Students' General Association / Association générale des étudiantes (SGA/AGE), and the Association for Laurentian Part-Time Students (ALPS) are all jointly hosting the event, and CFS will be the major sponsor for the event.

"We have three strong student associations here that can help," he said.

Imbeau explained that the slate of topics to be discussed during the three-day event include Aboriginal issues; Francophone issues; lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender student issues; issues for international students in the North; Northern Ontario development and funding for Northern universities. The weekend will wrap-up with a large roundtable discussion at which representatives to the conference can raise concerns and discuss any issues they wish to raise.

"Last year 'Spirit of the North' was in Thunder Bay, and it was a lot of fun, but it was expensive to get everyone up there," Imbeau noted. Still, the conference is particularly valuable to Northern Ontario universities, he said, because it offers them a greater opportunity to have their voice heard. He pointed out that, at the larger conferences in Southern Ontario, schools like the University of

NORD

Caucus de la Région du Nord

Fédération canadienne des étudiantes et étudiants

Toronto can afford to send several representatives because they have the money to do so, and the smaller Northern universities tend to get lost in the shuffle.

Imbeau noted that while the Minister of Post-Secondary Education, Universities and Colleges has struck a committee to discuss the concerns of francophone students, the University of Ottawa is the only school to actually have representatives on the committee. The CFS, however, does have one representative on the committee, and 'Spirit of the North' will provide an opportunity to inform that person on the issues critical to francophone students in Northern Ontario.

"A lot of the Northern francophone vice gets lost," he pointed out. "(The conference) helps to create a united Northern voice."

Furthermore, he suggested that the Northern universities have a lot more in common with one another, and therefore have a lot more to discuss between them.

One of the advantages of hosting the conference at Laurentian, Imbeau said, is that the school is very diverse, and allows for a wide variety of opinions from the part-time and mature students, the francophone students and those represented by the SGA/AGE, as well as from the school's large Aboriginal and International student populations.

"It is going to be a lot of fun. I am very excited to be showing off our campus and all of its diversity," Imbeau said.

Universal bus pass to go to referendum at LU

Well fellow students, it is with great pleasure that I can announce to you that, after years of trying, it looks as though the universal bus pass for us is finally ready to come to us for referendum.

You will here a great deal about the pass and what it's offering in the lead up to the March SGA/AGE elections, but I will give you a brief run-down of how the passes work and what we can expect from them. Universal buss passes, or U-Passes, are a mandatory program much like a health plan. Everybody buys into the system, which in turn drives down the costs for everyone else. Having the mandatory system will also position us better to make demands for service improvements. I have already spoken extensively to the transit manager about the need for late night buses and for improved weekend service, so they know that those things are on our agenda. The other benefit to the U-Pass

LUKE NORTON

system is the low price. Whereas students are currently paying $60 a month for their passes, the city has told me that the pass that will come to referendum will be an incredibly low $20-$25 a month. This means a difference of $280 a year for students currently taking the bus. Now I understand that many of you will not like the idea of having to pay for a bus pass when you already have a car and pay for parking, but if you'll indulge me for a moment, I will try to show you how this can still be a benefit to you. We all know what the price of gas is right now, and I'm sure that you're aware that it probably isn't going to get any cheaper anytime soon. That coupled with high insurance costs and the likely increases to parking fees next year provides a pretty substantial financial incentive to use the bus pass. Even if you keep your car, you can still use the pass. For example, if you need to make a quick trip downtown, or over to the shopping centre, or out to the bars at night, you can hop on the bus and save your gas for those times when the buses won't help or aren't convenient. Plus you could always just think altruistically about it and recognize that by combining all of our numbers, we can make traveling much less expensive for students who don't have or can't afford cars.

What the SGA/AGE needs now from you is to hear what services you want to see from the transit system. This can be anything from extra buses at peak hours, to late night service, to direct buses to the Four Corners. I need to know what times you want buses at night, when you want buses that go to different locations, et cetera. We need to get our demands to the transit manager so that he can calculate what increased services will have to be put in place before the referendum vote in March. Please send your wish lists to me via my email at sgapresident@laurentian.ca and I will pass them on to the city.

I am very happy to be able to bring this good news to you. Students have been pushing the city for a more affordable and better bus system for over ten years, and at long last it would appear that we have gotten it. Congratulations to us all.

LU Young Liberals vow their party will be back

Fellow citizens of Laurentian University, Nickel Belt, Sudbury, and Canada,

We have just concluded an election period that resulted in the election of a new Federal Government. Before I address that, I would like to first say thank you to those volunteers that assisted in the re-election campaigns of Raymond Bonin in Nickel Belt and Diane Marleau. The city of Sudbury is honoured to have two Members of Parliament that will advocate for those issues that are important to Sudburians and those that live within the Greater City of Sudbury for the school year.

In reference to our new government, I say congratulations. Canadians have chosen to give Steven Harper an opportunity to lead them as their Prime Minister. I wish him and the Conservative Party of Canada luck in their endeavor to move Canada in a new direction. But I say this to all Conservatives in the Greater City of Sudbury: "We will be back." Canadians have chosen to give the Conservatives a slim minority. Another election is just around the corner. When that time comes we will ensure the election of Liberals in Sudbury and Nickel Belt. When that time comes we will ensure that the Liberal Party of Canada returns to its home in the Government benches.

Enjoy your stay on the Government side of the house. Keep those seats warm.

Sustainable Earth Club News

(From left to right) Aaron Gervais, Vanessa Oakley, Lisa Porter and Nicholas Babiuk, of Laurentian's Sustainable Earth Club, could easily be found at Tim Horton's outlets throughout the university recently encouraging students, staff and administration to "Lug-A-Mug."

LU's Sustainable Earth Club undertakes Lug-A-Mug campaign

BY MATTHEW DESROSIERS
ASSISTANT EDITOR

For the past week, the Sustainable Earth Club has been staking out Tim Hortons around campus, persuading customers to put the environment first. Starting on Monday Jan 23rd, it carried on until the 27th. The Lug-A-Mug campaign had volunteers from the club convincing fellow students to carry their mugs with them to Tim Hortons. The goal of the campaign is to reduce paper waste on campus, said Lisa Porter, club member and volunteer. "We're not just here to give them mugs. We're here to give them information."

The club spent the first part of the week in the student center, calling out to the people waiting in line at Tim Hortons to stop by the booth and hear what they had to say. The latter part of the week saw them down in the bowling alley, continuing the campaign. For those who did not have mugs handy, the club was selling them for $2 a piece, while including ballots thrown into a draw for a chance to win various prizes. Also at the booth, the club was passing around a petition that calls upon Tim Hortons head office to make a stronger effort to be environmentally friendly. The success of the campaign can be seen by looking at the large number of signatures on that petition, and in the 200 mugs that were sold over the course of the week.

The Sustainable Earth club "[hopes] that those who participated throughout the week will continue to help reduce campus waste by lugging their mugs, and that those who have not yet adopted the habit will think about the advantages of reusing and recycling."

As a new club that already boasts over fifty members, they have been very active in the Laurentian community. More events are on the way, ensures Aaron Gervais. The club comes up with ideas for events and then passes around e-mails to all of its members in search of volunteers. If the Sustainable Earth Club is something that interests you, you can contact them at sustainable@laurentian.ca.

LU Trivia Club aims to qualify for nationals

BY MATTHEW DESROSIERS
ASSISTANT EDITOR

Laurentian University is a place that we come to to learn and prepare ourselves for whatever future may lie ahead. For the Laurentian University Trivia Club, however, it provides an environment where they can both learn and play.

"I was watching Jeopardy when I came out of the womb" said Jordan Stopciati, President of the Trivia Club. "[You never know] when random facts [will] come in handy, and [trivia] is good for the brain." He started his trivia career in Grade 9 with 'Reach for the Top,' a competitive trivia highschool program.

"A lot of [trivia players] used to play reach in highschool," which he said provides a strong background for upper level competitions.

This is the club's first year at Laurentian. In November, they represented the school in St. Catharines in two tournaments, ACF (academic based tournament) and TRASH (pop-culture based tournament). The club competes in the Quizbowl format, wherein two teams of four face off and 'buzz in' to answer the toss up questions. After correctly answering the toss up, the team then receives a number of bonus questions. The club was the top ranked Canadian team at ACF and made a strong showing at TRASH. Stopciati was ranked one of the top scorers in both tournaments.

"You need to know common facts and some obscure things. You also have to master the buzzer," he said when asked what makes a good trivia player.

In February, the club is going to Montreal for a qualifying tournament against 20 other teams. The top teams in that tournament will compete in the finals against the winners of the other qualifiers across the nation.

"There is a preference towards Academic questions, but there are also pop-culture questions," said Stopciati. The team gets together twice a week to look over various trivia websites and to practice. The club will send its top players in hopes of making yet another strong showing on behalf of LU.

On the home front, the club is looking into starting up Intrameural Trivia contests.

"We'd love to invite both students and faculty to participate," Stopciati said. The club is looking to march should these intrameurals take place.

With only five students currently signed up, the LUL Trivia Club is looking for more members. All that is required is a love of trivia and the will to learn. The club meets twice a week on Tuesdays and Fridays, and can be reached at lultrivia@gmail.com.

Rights and Democracy Delegation forming at Laurentian University

The Centre for Rights and Democracy in Montreal is coming to Laurentian University to set up a Rights and Democracy Delegation here. On February 9th, Elana Wright will be hosting the founding meeting of the Rights and Democracy Delegation at Laurentian University in the Brenda Wallace reading room located in the JN Desmarais library. There will be coffee and snacks provided for those who attend.

The formation of a local delegation will provide a place to meet, discuss and act for those students who are concerned about the current state of human rights and democracy in the world, who wish to learn more about these matters or do something about it, or who wish to explore links between their field of study and their concerns about these global issues.

The Rights and Democracy Network of which Laurentian is now a part, helps to promote human rights and democracy across Canada. It supports student Delegations in Canadian universities and colleges, provides resources that allow students to learn more about human rights, democratic and globalization, it creates spaces where students can share ideas with the international community and to carry out activities that 'put the world to rights', and supports professional development and internship and employment opportunities.

The Rights and Democracy Network has brought students from across Canada together to discuss issues related to rights and democracy and to take on related project and it has sent Canadian student delegations overseas to work with foreign students on common projects.

For more information, please feel free to attend the meeting Friday, February 9th. Also, you can contact Valerie Boucher at VN_Boucher@laurentian.ca, Dr. Rachid Bagaoui at Rbagaoui@laurentienne.ca and Dr. Henri Pallard at Hpallard@laurentienne.ca. GRADUATE NEWS

Options to consider before graduation

BY ROBIN CROWDER
LAMBDA CONTRIBUTOR

As the end of January approaches at a remarkable speed, many of us graduating students are coming to that four month crunch: we have only 87 days left until the end of university rolls around and we are faced with the inevitable – REAL LIFE. It is the time when we start running through all the possibilities in our overworked and already hoping for retirement brains: Do I want to do my Masters? Do I want to go home and live off my parents for awhile? Do I want to start right into my career? Or perhaps more realistically, what do I want my career to be? If you are not absolutely certain what you want to be when you grow and you don't feel quite ready to start in on graduate work, here are a few options to get you thinking.

There are many different programs that can get you initiated to the working world while helping you to actually see some of the rest of the world in the process. Some of them allow you to apply as a student, though you will be expected to have graduated by the time you begin your term. A lot of these programs are also run by the Canadian federal government; an organization that is known to give preference to previous employees and very good pensions upon retirement, so now is a good time to get your foot in the door!

SWAP: Student Work Abroad Program

www.swap.ca

This program essentially provides you with a working holiday. You choose which country you want to apply to (and there is a huge variety ranging from all of the continents) and the program coordinators help you apply for a Visa and all necessary travel documents. SWAP does not actually find a job for you, but rather provides you with much of the valuable information. The purpose is to allow you to travel a country while doing part-time work – most people will end up doing restaurant or bar work – in order to help finance your travels. A bonus is that SWAP provides an entire support network of people to contact when you arrive at your destination, often an initial place to stay and internet time for job searches. The downfall is that many of the applications are somewhat costly and you must have a designated amount of "support funds" in order to be accepted – not always an easy thing with the repayment of student loans tapping you on the shoulder. However, most participants find SWAP a valuable exchange and feel that it allows them to see another country from an insider's, not a tourist's, point of view. For more information, visit Travel Cuts on campus.

Young Professionals International

www.hri.ca/internships/YIIP_index.htm

YPI combines experience working within Canada and abroad for university or college graduates between the ages of 19 and 30. It is open to people from diverse fields and offers a number of different job opportunities. The program tends to seek out people who are culturally sensitive, interested in human rights and development, who want to make a difference in the world and who are generally positive – while a degree in a field related to the chosen internship is helpful, it is not always necessary. Participants are provided with a living expenses stipend as well as a salary, though it is not a huge sum, remember that you are being given the opportunity to work abroad and make important and lasting connections.

Positions and internships for the 2006-2007 year will be posted on the website in March.

NetCorps Internship Program

http://www.hri.ca/internships/netcorps_index.htm

This is a program funded by Industry Canada and aimed at graduates in the information and communication technology fields. While you do not have to hold a degree from these fields, you must have adequately developed related skills and knowledge and have an interest in human rights. Internships last six months and placements are generally in southern countries, or countries in transition, where participants complete various tasks in helping to implement different technologies within NGOs. Again, there is an intensive pre-departure briefing session in Ottawa, and a stipend to cover things such as accommodation, airfare, etc, but will be required to contribute to the program costs through fundraising or other means. Positions for 2006-2007 will be posted on the website in March.

International Youth Internship Program

<http://www.hri.ca/internships/CIDA/index.htm>

Very similar in nature to the two previous internships, this program is funded by the Canadian International Development Agency and accepts applicants from a wide variety of backgrounds. Once again, participants are expected to be knowledgeable in international development, aid and human rights – or at least to express a strong interest and a willingness to learn. Interns are placed all over the world, many in Africa, working generally with non-profit organizations implementing projects or conducting studies. This is a non-remunerated position, though a stipend is given to help cover costs, but the experience gained and the valuable position of having your foot in the door at the CIDA is worth the application! New placements will be posted on the website in March 2006.

Environment Canada's Science Horizons Youth Internship Program

http://www.ec.gc.ca/sci_hor/index.html

For promising young scientists and recent graduates, this internship allows you the hands-on experience of working in a variety of environmental projects under the supervision and mentorship of experienced scientists. The length of the program varies from placements of 6 months up to one year, with 100 positions awarded across Canada each year. Applicants must submit a project proposal and can receive up to $12,000 in funding if their project is approved. Graduates must submit a resumé along with their proposal and have a specific employer in mind (this employer will also need to fill out a separate application) before February 3rd, 2006. The timeframe for projects is from April 1st, 2006 through March 31st, 2007. Visit the website for further details.

Public Service Commission of Canada

www.jobs.gc.ca
If you're not quite ready to work abroad, or you need to start earning cash right away, check out the Public Service Commission. They run an extensive post-secondary recruitment campaign twice a year (one in October and one right now) with a fair amount of entry level positions offered to graduates. The beauty of this program is that no experience is required in the job you apply for, though any knowledge or previous work will be an asset. Jobs are located across Canada with all different departments of the government, and you can specify your mobility; ie, willing to move or the desire to remain in your home region. Even if the job you apply for is not exactly what you hope to be doing for the rest of your life, remember that the best government jobs are offered internally – meaning you already have to be a federal employee to have access to new positions and promotions.

Walkhome Service goes "commercial"

BY JOSHUA LAW

WALKHOME VOLUNTEER

Volunteers of the Walkhome Service, with the help of members from the Laurentian community, took part in the production of a Walkhome Service mini-commercial.

The participants who took the time to do the commercial were able to use their improvisation skills that they may not have known they had! Hurray for them! They helped address what The Walkhome Service does by staging various scenarios; from a late night evening of study, being at school with a snowstorm brewing, and even how to becoming a volunteer. The people who took part are not renowned actors or actresses but these local talents came through with flying colours. The Laurentian community has plenty of hidden talents and we are glad announce that these few decided to grant us a great service with their help!

One of the commercials begins with a group of friends studying for exams. One of them doing poorly in Spanish and getting help from an international Spanish speaking student. This student also comes to the rescue by introducing The Walkhome Service.

Another commercial shows a worse case scenario with students working on a final task. It is 1am on a Friday at night and the project is due Saturday morning at 10am. The students realize a snowstorm is brewing. One of them finds a Walkhome Service business card and they call Walkhome knowing that they will get a ride to their vehicle in the Pit (the lower parking lot).

The final scenario has one student realizing that his cell phone has no more power so he uses the campus in-house phone (the white phones found all over campus – the emergency phones) to call The Walkhome Service. When he meets the volunteers, he notices that one of the volunteers is one of his friends who just joined.

These commercials show some of the ways/reasons Walkhome customers contact Walkhome and if wanted to, can become a volunteer. One method not mentioned to get the attention of the bright yellow Walkhome van is by flagging it down (waving at the van when it is driving by) to alert the driver that you would like a ride.

So fellow Laurentian community students, keep your eyes peeled, the Walkhome commercials will be seen at Walkhome information booths in the upcoming months. Write the following questions down and when you answer them, you can win a mini-prize.

PLEASE NOTE: Walkhome volunteers (past and present 2005-2006) and the persons who are in the commercial(s), unfortunately will not be eligible of winning a mini-prize.

Ways to win the prize:

When the Walkhome mini-commercial is shown on campus, identify three of the volunteers in the video. We need their full first name and the initial of their last name.

What is the name of the international Spanish speaking student? How does this Spanish speaking student introduce The Walkhome Service?

In the commercial of the three students and the snowstorm, what are the genders of those students? Where does one of the students get the Walkhome Service business card?

Send all answers to either number 1-2-3 to: Walkhome@laurentian.ca along with your full name and the name of the program you are enrolled in.

Prizes are limited so there will be a draw to pick the winners from all the correct answers.

Ontario Internship Program

www.internship.gov.on.ca

Rather than a placement in the federal government, this program places accepted candidates in a one to two year position within Ontario's provincial government. Areas of specialty include business and financial planning, policy making, communications, labour relations, human resources, project management and information technology; you don't need to have a degree specific to one of these fields, but at least have some experience. Salaries vary depending on the position, as do the tasks and projects, but interns are generally well remunerated.

For further information about post secondary opportunities within the federal government, talk to Gabrielle Lavigne in the Student Placement Centre. Don't forget that the Placement Centre is there for your benefit and they are more than willing to assist you in finding the perfect career choice and opportunity.

NOTE: due to the date of this article's publication, some of the application deadlines may already have closed – however, don't let that stop you from keeping the website and applying the next time around!

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Looking for love at LU

BY MATTHEW DESROSSIER
ASSISTANT EDITOR

It is the month of St. Valentine, and while love is always in the air this time of year, a little extra help never hurts.

LaurentianDating.com is a website that allows for Laurentian University (LU) Students to meet one another, whether for romantic or platonic relationships. Unlike many other on-line dating websites, this site is both tasteful and completely free. Boasting several features such as blog spaces and instant messaging, this site is completely tailored to the LU Student and all his/her needs.

The creator of LaurentianDating.com is Mike McCarthy, a former Trent University student who decided that meeting people at school could be facilitated by way of the web. He created TrentDating.com, which had over 1,500 members four months after its launch.

"TrentDating.com provided me with a fun way to meet other students who were single, and gain many new friendships along the way," said McCarthy. "I want Laurentian students to enjoy the same service that Trent students are enjoying."

After putting so much time into creating TrentDating.com, McCarthy decided that he could make copies of his site and tailor them to different schools.

"Because I spent so many months working on the site, I figured why limit myself to Trent. If there is a demand at Trent, there's a demand at other places too."

LaurentianDating.com is not the only other site to branch from the original in Trent. There are 17 of these sites in total, including one for Lakehead (300 members) and Brock (600 members). These sites have been up for less than a month, and already have become popular among the student body.

"I'm hoping that word of mouth will help jump start the site. This is how the Trent site took off, and I'm hoping that the same will happen at Laurentian," says McCarthy.

The website requires students to fill out a lot of personal information, such as what program they are in or which residence they live in.

"That information adds to the value of the site," McCarthy claims. All the information is password protected, and stored in databases with a company called Hostgater.

According to McCarthy, he has never had any complaints regarding the stability of his site or the safety of the information. He suggests that his site is as safe as any other on-line dating website out there. Despite these assurances, it is still important to take some measure of precaution when meeting potential strangers on-line. McCarthy admits that he has no way to ensure that all members of the site are Laurentian students, although the site will only be advertised on the LU campus.

McCarthy's vision of the student body connected via the web has become reality in many Universities across Ontario. With Laurentian next to receive this service and Valentines Day on the horizon, he looks on anxiously to see if LaurentianDating.com will be as successful as his other projects.

"I feel that Laurentian students will benefit from the site. It was built for them, and I hope they take advantage of it."

Laurentian students host Banff Mountain Film Festival

BY ROBIN CROWDER
A&E EDITOR

The Sudbury community shared in an international experience this past weekend as students of Laurentian's Outdoor Adventure Leadership (ADVL) Program hosted the world renowned Banff Mountain Film Festival for the ninth year in a row.

Each year, the festival invites film makers from across the globe to submit short films that embody the "mountain spirit": this produces films that range anywhere from up close profiles of mountain communities to adrenaline packed extreme sport personal stories. From the approximately 300 films submitted from 39 different countries stems the Banff Mountain Film Festival World Tour which travels to over 250 communities in 25 countries, uniting outdoor and adventure enthusiasts alike.

The stop is Sudbury is a welcomed one: far from any significant mountain range, it is not often that community members get to engage in the excitement of mountain culture. Hosted as a fundraiser for their program, it also gives ADVL students the opportunity to become involved with the community as well as helping to defray the costs of their program.

As a part of their program requirements, third year ADVL students participate in a spring session that trades the traditional classroom for the great outdoors and has them taking five different leadership courses over a two month period. The session also involves a two week trip up to the James Bay area where the students learn to lead excursions such as rock climbing and canoeing. However, ADVL is not only about outdoor adventures: the students graduate from a four year program with a Bachelor of Physical Education, specializing in outdoor leadership, and also end up with between 10 and 15 different certifications, such as NLS, CPR and First Aid. These certifications do not come cheaply and, in conjunction with their Risk, Safety and Public Management course, the students work hard to organize fund raising events that will benefit the community as well as their program.

This year, ADVL students worked with the Banff Festival coordinators to present a selection of nine different short films, produced all over the world, that they felt would most interest the Sudbury community: their choices were very well received.

One particularly interesting film was made by two Canadian film makers and told the story of another Canadian woman named Cynthia who traveled to the Ladakh region of India and decided to stay. Cynthia has since begun devoting her life to helping the Ladakhi people of remote mountain villages: she started her own NGO called HEALTH Inc. (Health, Environment and Literacy in the Himalayas), with the mandate of improving the health, sanitation, education and village sustenance of communities who are occasionally a four day mountain hike away from any main road. This 50 minute film was an inspiring tale of what can be accomplished with a little determination and a big heart.

All in all, congratulations are in order not only to the film makers who produced the incredible films, but also to the ADVL students who managed to organize a flawless event, selling out nearly the entire Fraser Auditorium, soliciting many awesome prizes and engaging the Sudbury community in a breath-taking view of the world outside the city. Well done!

*Where Is The Hole
I Can Crawl Into?
Dealing With Depression and Anxiety*

You know it! Being a University student offers new experiences as well as challenges. This can be very exciting but can also be stressful enough to cause you, or someone you know, to feel sad. If these sad feelings last for weeks or get in the way of your academic performance and social life, then the RED light should go on. Chances are you have depression and it's not "just the blues".

Let's take a closer look at just what depression is, shall we? Depression can affect your body, mood, thoughts and behavior. It can change your eating habits, how you feel and think about things, your ability to work and study, and how you interact with people. Wow! As you can see, depression can affect us "big time" so perhaps we ought to take some "big time" to check it out!

Okay, out comes the microscope. Some of the warning signs of depression can include sadness, irritability and excessive crying, fatigue, being "slowed down," sleeping disturbances, appetite and weight changes, alcohol and drug abuse, and chronic aches and pains not explained by any other physical condition. Depression can cause feelings of hopelessness, guilt and worthlessness. There may be difficulty concentrating, making decisions, or remembering things. Thoughts of death and suicide remain the most dangerous indicator of depression for those who feel they cannot cope.

Please...if you are thinking of hurting or killing yourself, or you know someone who is, SEEK HELP IMMEDIATELY. Contact someone you trust to help you - a close friend, academic or resident advisor. You or that "someone you know" will need crisis intervention and assessment at a hospital right away. Depression is treatable but a life cannot be brought back.

Curious as to what causes depression? The answer to this can be complex. Often, there is a combination of genetic (biological), psychological and environmental (social) factors but sometimes, there may be no known reason at all. The good news is that it is always treatable with medication and/or lifestyle changes and counseling. Life transitions and change often initiate stress and depression for students. These changes include greater academic demands, being on your own in a new environment, changes in family relations, financial responsibilities, changes in your social life (this includes breakups), exposure to new people, ideas and temptations, awareness of your sexual identity and orientation, and preparing for life after graduation.

Depression has a close cousin named Anxiety. Depression and anxiety are often accompanied by anger and fear. For some, high stress levels can lead to depression as well as anxiety and/or anger difficulties. During a depressive episode, a holistic approach to self care becomes critical, such as getting enough sleep, proper nutrition, adequate exercise, and time for recreation.

Laurentian University has a Student Services office that offers a student counseling service with qualified counselors who specialize in working with students who are experiencing depression. The Special Needs Center, Health Services and Student Services all work together to support students with depression by referring to other student services and assisting with deadline extensions, recognition of extenuating circumstances and "time out".

So.... ALWAYS be good to yourself as you soldier on through your studies towards your goals! YOU ARE WORTH IT!

Candace Lahti is a Fourth Year, Social Work Student who is doing her placement at Student Services. You can connect with Student Services by dropping in to Room L-210 at the R.D. Parker Building. We're easy to find — SS is located in the hallway beside the bookstore, just past the Women's Centre.

ONLINE SURVEY OF LAURENTIAN STUDENTS

Laurentian and other Ontario universities are participating in the National Survey for Student Engagement (NSSE). The survey has been used for the past seven years by about 1,000 colleges and universities across North America.

In February, you'll receive an email from President Woodsworth, through the NSSE head office at Indiana University, inviting you to fill out the 2006 NSSE online survey.

Not only will the results contribute to establishing standards for Canada-wide educational practice, they will allow Laurentian to compare your experience to those of students across Canada and the U.S. and help determine what changes are needed to improve the overall experience here.

All first-year and graduating Laurentian students are invited to participate in the online survey, which should take about 15 minutes.

For more information, visit www.nsse.iub.edu, contact the Call Centre at ext. 3917 (ask for the NSSE survey consultant) or send an email to nsse@laurentian.ca.

Science Communication program blends science with social arts

BY LAURA THERRIEN
SCIENCE & TECH EDITOR

It's like having a really good idea and not being able to express it properly, or looking at something and describe its basic features but not really understand it? Communication is difficult considering there are so many different methods in which it can be done and especially when it comes to communicating science. Often in the field, researchers have a wealth of knowledge to share with others but no real means to do so. Or in the area of media and communications, sometimes the lack of basic knowledge on a subject can seriously cripple the credibility of the information being shared with the public. It is difficult to find the right balance of knowledge and communication skills.

In response, Laurentian University and Science North have created a program to address the need for effective and accurate science communications. The graduate studies program, which is in its first year, is a unique partnership and the only one of its kind in North America. Through a series of four modules, students are learning the theory behind good communication and discovering the practical side of effective science communication along with the issues of science in society. Students are acquiring essential skills in a variety of areas such as communication through information technology, mass media, exhibits and live programming.

"It's not just about science communication. You develop really great skills that can be applied to almost any situation which requires communication," said James Cooper, a current student of the program. "It involves the integration of a science based knowledge with social arts." Like Cooper, many of the students in the program are finding it relatively easy to make the transition of scientific thinking to communicating their knowledge but still face some challenges. Students who do not have a formal science education could face additional obstacles and often may have difficulty relating to certain topics.

The program is a great tool for scientists and researchers to establish effective relations with the external public whether it be through one-way communication or two-way conversations. Through exhibits and live shows, to print publication or broadcast news stories, students are learning the importance of understanding their audiences, analysing their audience and using proper techniques to convey their message and pass on their knowledge.

The program is quickly establishing a solid reputation both locally and through out the country. Currently, there are eight full-time and two part time students enrolled, and Dr. David Pearson, Co-Director of the Science Communication Program, is anticipating a larger interest for the 2006-2007 year. Already he has received several calls from interested individuals inquiring about the Science Communication program, with some as far as the Philippines. They are hoping to have a total of 15 students for the following year and could possibly increase the number of applicants accepted in the future depending on the need.

Although admittance into Science Communication does not require a Bachelor of Science, a solid knowledge of the field is required. Students who are interested in the Science Communication can visit the www.sciencenorth.ca for additional information or contact Dr. David Pearson with any questions regarding admission to the program.

The 411 on Studying Abroad

Is it worth your while?

MYTH: Study abroad programs are just a holiday offering no real educational value.

REALITY: Study abroad programs are the best way for you to develop the international skills and perspectives that you need to succeed in today's job market.

GET THAT COMPETITIVE EDGE!

Get what the top Canadian business executives are looking for: a cosmopolitan world view. More and more, people with an international perspective are needed to help our country remain competitive in a global economy. Employers today want to hire more graduates with international experience but such people are hard to find in Canada. Our country is far behind others in terms of international experience and we rely on international trade and relations for success more than they do.

The skills gained through a student's international experience are invaluable to his/her future. First and foremost, the knowledge of a second or third language gained from studying abroad is such an asset in today's job market. It opens the door to communication and to unlimited opportunities as our country is continuously diversifying culturally. Also, flexibility is gained from international experience. By going to another country, you are proving your ability to be both flexible and adaptable to a constantly changing environment, which is essential to any company's success. Finally, the ability to think internationally, and explore new perspectives and ways of doing business are priceless to Canadian business executives as it strengthens their company's ability to relate to and do business with the world around them.

Be a future leader and allow both yourself and your country to compete in the global knowledge economy. The facts are clear: study abroad isn't a vacation; it's an investment that benefits Canada as a whole.

If you would like more information on studying abroad, please feel free to contact us at Laurentian International. We look forward to assisting you!

Nordic Ski Team posts good results

BY DEREK RENZINI
SPORTS EDITOR

On the weekend of January 21st and 22nd, the Laurentian Nordic Ski Teams competed in their first race of 2006. The Voyageurs and Lady Vees ski teams travelled to Haliburton to compete in the OUA Designated Race #1 hosted by Trent University.

As the Nordic Ski teams took to the trails on Saturday, they were faced with gusty winds and new snow which contributed to less than ideal skiing conditions. Yet, Laurentian managed to overcome these obstacles and have some great races. Carly Kenwell, led the charge for the Lady Vees in the women's 5k classic race, finishing 6th with a time of 20:31.6. Aden Beresford finished 17th with a time of 22:36, and Heather Foley place 19th with a time of 23:04.9.

For the Voyageurs, Victor Wiltmann and Tim Carleton put in solid efforts, finishing the men's 10k race in 14th and 20th place with times of 36:37.8 and 39:19.2.

After grinding it out Saturday through difficult conditions, Sunday offered a better forecast.

The Lady Vees thrived in the 8k free race, as Carly Kenwell finished first with a time of 23:42.3. On her heels was rookie skier Julie Porter, who finished second with a time of 24:32.6 and Lilla Roy finished 8th with a time of 26:10.6.

In the men's 16k free race, two Voyageurs finished in the top ten. Victor Wiltmann finished 7th with a time of 44:26 and Tim Carleton was close behind finishing 9th with a time of 45:01.7. Also, Roddy Purzner placed 13th with a time of 46:12.6.

The Laurentian Nordic Ski teams will attempt to improve their results as they travel to Ottawa this upcoming weekend to compete in the OUA Designated Race #2. Laurentian will then be hosting the OUA championship on February 18th and 19th here in Sudbury.

Great weekend for Voyageurs

BY DEREK RENZINI
SPORTS EDITOR

The Laurentian Voyageurs men's basketball team traveled to Kingston this past weekend for their last road trip of the regular season. For the Voyageurs, their season has been highlighted by losing some very close games; dropping a total of four games by six points or less. However, it seems that justice was finally served this past Friday when the Voyageurs squared off against the University of Queen's Golden Gaels.

The Voyageurs began the game focused and energetic, which enabled them to execute on most of their opportunities. This earned them a 38-34 point lead, at the halfway point of the game. Heading into the second half, the Voyageurs rode the hot hand of Matt Brown who scored a season high, 26 points to go along with 5 rebounds. In the end, Laurentian was able to remain calm and poised in this seesaw battle and capitalized on all their chances down the stretch. The Voyageurs collective effort allowed them to come away with the win, slipping past the Golden Gaels 69-67.

Other contributors for Laurentian were Darrel Drake, with 14 points to go along with 2 rebounds and 4 assists, and Brody Bishop who also poured in 14 points and 2 rebounds. This was a nice win for the Voyageurs who have been hanging tough all season long.

"This was an excellent game for us, and it came down to the last couple possessions," said Hill.

After coming away victorious against Queens, the Voyageurs were looking to ride their momentum and to take care of business against the RMC (Royal Military College) Paladins on Saturday night.

A slow start for the Voyageurs allowed RMC to keep things close in the first half, which resulted in the Voyageurs only holding onto a one point lead, 28-27, heading into halftime.

Yet, the second half proved to be a whole different story. The Voyageurs dominated RMC on both the offensive and more importantly the defensive end of the floor, holding them to a measly 21 points in the second half. This great effort allowed Laurentian to come away with a lopsided victory, winning 73-48. High scorers for the Voyageurs were rookie Brady Bolan with 18 points and 7 rebounds and fourth year veteran Ben Palmer who dominated the paint adding 16 points and 5 rebounds. Also, all eleven Voyageurs saw the floor in this contest, and each team member contributed; as everyone scored at least one basket.

The Voyageurs are playing smart basketball and these were two big wins. "It was a great way to end our road trip," said Head Coach Virgil Hill.

Laurentian extends their winning streak to three games, which improves their record to 6-11 on the season. They will also now have the luxury of playing their five remaining games at home. The Voyageurs play host to the Carleton Ravens this Friday and the Ottawa Gee-Gees on Saturday. Both games are scheduled for 8pm in the Ben Avery Gymnasium.

LU Swim Teams focus on OUA Championships

BY DEREK RENZINI
SPORTS EDITOR

For the Laurentian University swim teams February is without a doubt a very important month. Come the second week in February, the L.U. swim teams hope to be prepared and ready to compete in the OUA Conference Championships that are being hosted by Laurentian University.

All season long, both the Aqua and Lady Vees have been training hard in preparation for this event. Over the Christmas break, both swim teams headed south to Sarasota, Florida for their annual winter training camp.

"The camp gave swimmers a chance to come together as a team and perform some aggressive training leading into the heart of our season", said Head Coach Phil Parker.

Both swim teams have continued to work hard in the month of January. They competed at the Ontario University Cup in Toronto and at a dual meet this past weekend in Guelph, which was their last race before the Conference Championships.

Unfortunately, the Aqua and Lady Vees were unable to come out on top this weekend against the Guelph Gryphons. The men came up short and were defeated 68 to 116 and the women lost 69 to 114.

Although both teams were defeated they did manage to post some very impressive individual results, with numerous first, second and third place finishes in both the men and women's categories. Both teams should be ready to contend in two weeks time.

"This was our last chance of racing before the conference championships in two weeks here at LU. We have some work ahead of us this week in terms of their overall execution and after this they will be ready to make some waves at OUA's", said Parker.

Lady Vees wins two on the road

BY DEREK RENZINI
SPORTS EDITOR

Embarking on their last road trip of the regular season, the Laurentian Lady Vees basketball team found themselves up against the University of Queens Golden Gaels and the RMC (Royal Military College) Paladins this past weekend in Kingston.

On Friday night, the Lady Vees convincingly defeated the Golden Gaels by a score of 73-53.

The Lady Vees were simply too much for Queen's to handle, as they dominated them from start to finish. The Lady Vees utilized their size to get many easy baskets in the paint and were easily able to control the offensive and defensive glass; out-rebounding the Gaels throughout the game.

More importantly, Laurentian showcased their defensive abilities and were able to keep Queen's leading score, Claire Meadows, a non factor as she was held pointless.

Cassandra Carpenter led the way for the Lady Vees, scoring 28 points, shooting 17-20 from the stripe. Lisa Roberts, who played the whole 40 minutes of the game, also added 15 points.

Head Coach Mike Clarke was especially impressed with Robert's all-round performance. "Lisa led the team, and played absolutely fantastic defence, this was perhaps the best game a point guard has ever played for me as a Head Coach," said Clarke.

With one road win under their belt, the Lady Vees looked to keep their focus as they matched up against an untested RMC Paladins squad on Saturday night. Laurentian established an early lead and never looked back, soundly defeating RMC, 80-59. The Paladins just couldn't keep pace and the Lady Vees showcased why they are the superior team; dominating the Paladins in all aspects of the game.

As she is accustomed to doing, Cassandra Carpenter torched RMC, netting a total of 30 points to go along with 14 rebounds and 5 steals. Other scorers, were Amanda McConnell with 14 points, 11 rebounds and Lisa Roberts with 11 points and 5 assists.

Although Head Coach Mike Clarke wasn't happy with his team's defence (giving up 59 points to this RMC squad), he was pleased with his team's overall effort.

"We had excellent rebounding and made great offensive decisions while staying patient," said Clarke. "Now we need to keep the momentum going."

For the Lady Vees, they are in fact gaining momentum. They've put together a three game winning streak, have improved to 9-8 and will now have home court advantage for the remainder of the season.

The Lady Vees play host to the Carleton Ravens this Friday and the Ottawa-Gee Gees on Saturday. Tip-off times for both games are scheduled for 6pm in the Ben Avery Gymnasium.

Laurentian lacrosse teams plan to build on success

Back in January 2005 a group of about thirty Laurentian students interested in lacrosse, Canada's national summer sport, got together and played a non-contact co-ed version of the game — known as interlax — on weekends in the Alphonse Raymond gymnasium. Encouraged by the turn-out, the leader of the group — Sport Psychology major Caleb Leduc — sought recognition from the SGA and set up a table in mid-September 2005 during club days.

Some 200 students, men and women, full and part-time, put their names on the list, and about 40 to 50 made it out regularly in the weeks to come. On the goose poop covered field in the centre of the oval track, the Laurentian Lacrosse Club played fun games of non-contact lacrosse every Thursday evening.

But some "hardcore" members wanted a bit more competitive play. So each Thursday the first hour was set aside for the interlax games, and then about 35 people stayed behind to learn more about field lacrosse. The men's squad was coached by Dr. George Sheppard, an associate professor in the School of Education and a longtime player, while Kim Leger-Frawley, an LU alumnus and former member of the Ontario and Canadian women's field lacrosse teams, agreed to help out with the ladies' squad. Suddenly, Laurentian had a competitive club lacrosse programme.

For those unfamiliar with the game, lacrosse is an ancient sport played by Native people throughout North America. In the 1800s the outdoor game caught on amongst non-Natives, especially in Canada and the northeastern US, and by the 1900s several versions had evolved. In Canada most players learned the "box" game, called that because it takes place in an arena or "box," while the outdoor field game remained far more popular in the United States. By the late 20th Century, field lacrosse was a major collegiate sport in America, especially at Ivy League schools like Princeton and Yale, but it had little hold north of the border.

Over the last two decades, however, there has been a renaissance of sorts in the outdoor game. Twenty years ago men's club teams began to appear at McMaster, Brock, Western, Guelph and other Ontario universities, and women's varsity squads soon popped up all over the province too. In the last three years, the game has exploded in popularity with at least six universities in Quebec and Maritimes sponsoring teams as well.

So this autumn was an auspicious time for the Laurentian club, but inquiries to the Canadian University Field Lacrosse Association indicated that the students here would have to meet a number of challenges before being considered for actual entry into the league. They would have to show they had support from the university, were financially viable, and most difficult of all, they had to prove they could compete successfully against actual CUFLA teams.

But LU students are known for meeting challenges and these young men and women proved up to the task. They began selling chocolates to purchase nets, jerseys, and equipment, met two or three times a week for additional sessions, and set about arranging exhibition matches. Although they only had about a eight or so real practices under their belts, on the weekend of November 5th and 6th, both squads went looking for competition. The women's team traveled to Montreal where they participated in a mini-tournament against highly touted teams from Canada and the United States. The Lacrosse is enjoying a surge at Laurentian, as competitive field lacrosse teams for both men and women enjoyed successful first seasons last fall. Organizers of the two teams are now hoping to build on the program at LU.

men, meanwhile, (after rousing set off for Hamilton at 7 am in the sleepyhead goalie Andrew Lawton) midst of a scary wind/rain/snowstorm to play against McMaster (a programme that has been in existence for 20 years and is led by Ed Comeau, head coach of the NLL's Rochester Knighthawks and assistant coach of the National Men's team!)

Considering those facts, the Laurentian athletes did exceptionally well — especially since most had never played field lacrosse before and a good number had only picked up a stick for the first time in September. In their match, for example, the men managed to stay close to the Marauders, and lost by a score of only 7 to 4, while the women even managed a victory against Bishop's (losing close games to McGill, Vermont, and Montreal). Coach Leger-Frawley remarked that the trip was "Awesome ... the girls were wonderful and proudly represented Laurentian."

And what impressed coach Sheppard was the outpouring of goodwill from people at the university and beyond. He said "The Greater Sudbury Lacrosse Association, for example, provided free equipment and fundraising materials, Kingswear Sports in the Valley provided discounted uniforms, Mike's Sports in Garson supplied equipment (from nets to sticks) at cost price or even below, and Laurentian staff and faculty were exceptionally accommodating too. We had help and advice from Athletic Director Peter Hellstrom and from Sandy Knox and Pat Pickard in Human Kinetics, while Ron Larwood and Dorothy Pitzel in Active Living made sure we had field access. I can tell you from experience that not every community or university is as supportive of its student athletes."

Currently the club has restarted the Saturday non-contact co-ed Interlax version, and has plans to play against Nipissing/Canadore soon. Also the members are making firm plans for more competitive matches next fall.

Laurentian students interested in playing either or both versions of our national summer sport are invited to contact the club at lax@laurentian.ca.
